Once upon a time...

by Frank Lloyd

While Frank Lloyd Wright was beginning to experiment with domestic design in Chicago, two young men fresh from M.I.T. school of architecture came out to Pasadena for a planned brief visit with their father. It was early in the last decade of the 19th century, and the two brothers remained in Pasadena to found the distinguished partnership of Greene and Greene, famed for originating the so-called California bungalow, a style later to sweep the nation. But after 20 years, one of the brothers came up to Carmel-by-the-Sea and remained the rest of his life.

He was Charles Summer Greene, a modest man given in his later years to Oriental mysticism, who left behind a monument to his career in native granite — the D.L. James house and garden — which stand on the steep rocky shore at Carmel Highlands. There also remains his studio on the south Lincoln Street in old brick with attendant arches, much of it fashioned and adorned with his own hands, as well as the "watering trough" in mid-Ocean Avenue at San Carlos, of chiseled Carmel stone.

No ordinary man, Charles Greene was an artist, while his brother, Henry Mather Greene, was the more practical. Together they won acclaim and the firm of Greene and Greene was continued by his brother long after he himself removed to Carmel, bringing his English-born wife, Alice, and their five children to live in what was then a true village. The year was 1916.

The following year the D.L. James house at Carmel Highlands, below the highway and just north of the Highlands Inn turnoff, began taking shape. But it was four long years a-building, with rock blasted out of the cliffs on Spindrift Road by John "Riccio" Moltini, now a rugged but aging Carmelite. Before it was finished Ben Figueroa, Carmel's ever-enduring stone mason, worked on improvements as well as the retaining wall at the highway turnout, all of the same local granite.

Not only was the stone work constantly watched by Greene, but he himself carved solid teak, which went into doors and windows and other parts of the house, and the whole place bears his intimate, artistic touch. The James' son, Dan and his wife, Lilith, carefully preserve this place which received national notice in the early 20's. The garden walks and the stone entry all bear the Greene mark. So does his old studio, of used brick and tile and preserved by his son, Thomas Gordon Greene and his wife, Betty Patchin Greene, the writer, to which rooms have been added to make the studio a home. The parents had maintained a musical centre there.

Behind the studio once stood the board-and-batten home Charles Greene built in harmony with some of his Pasadena designs, simple and unassuming.

Others of this unique family include Patrickson, the elder boy, long ago a pal of Langley Howard, himself son of architect John Galen Howard, who designed the campanile bell tower on the UC Berkeley campus. The Howards once lived halfway between the Greene studio and the place the Greens lived in earlier, now the Harold Mack house at the northeast corner of Carmelo and 13th.

Lola Greene was a dark beauty and once married to the musician and early Bach Festival conductor well-known years ago in Carmel, Michel Penha. She became a gemologist and now lives happily in Spain. Then there is Bettie Greene, blonde as Lola was dark, who discovered horses halfway through high school.

Bettie Greene was a star student for two years, then suddenly there came a horse into her life and she admits she barely made it to graduation. Years later, and several stables later also, she is still the gentle woman in her own identifiable costume, faded blue jeans, woolen sweater, rugged boots, suitable for working with her horses or going to find discarded carrots and other wonderful vegetables to add to the diet of her horses. She has a disarming smile, a direct look, and you know instantly that she found her life long ago and remained true to her choice.

Bettie still develops thoroughbreds down at her acreage on Val Verde Way. Originally her stables stood at the northeast corner of Junipero and Fifth, a great place for children who joined in helping her with chores and often paid for their riding in this manner.

In her love of animals, Bettie resembles her aunt (now gone), Jane Storey White, who had a once stately Victorian ranch house, fully filligreed, in Pine Canyon on the Salinas side of Mount Toro.

Miss White had a beautiful family library, so remarkable that when she was forced to leave, Paul Elder, the traditional San Francisco book dealer, made it his personal duty to come down to inspect.

But Miss White also had a remarkable herd of goats, all of them friends of hers, and she milked them in the dark of night as well as by day, because goats prefer it that way, and sold the milk to the Meyenberg company which canned it in Salinas.

When Filipinos came by, as they frequently did out of love for kid meat, Miss White refused to sell them any of her flock, and yet the numbers never grew. She confided that the excess young bucks she "put to sleep," lovingly, and buried them sadly in the little goat graveyard nearby.

When she moved to Atascadero, the books did not go with her, but her goats did, to start a new life. There, as seems the duty of all of this long-lived family, she lived into her 90's.

Toward the end of Charles Greene's life, he with his long, white page-boy haircut and pince nez glasses, and Jimmy Hopper, the writer, with curly locks and nearly his age, made an unusually touching picture, two now fragile gentlemen, walking thoughtfully together down Santa Lucia Street into the sunset. They were two great men, each in his own sunset, artists each in his way, stepping silently together toward the west.

Doolittle

Dear Editor:

I share General Easterbrook's regret that the stack of culvert pipes has been moved to Doolittle. Since I was active in initiating their removal from Forest Theatre, I think it worth noting that I informed the council meeting that none of this material had been used in over a year; and that it was available for quick delivery from suppliers. I implied it did not need to be kept at all, by offering to buy it and remove it.

Now culvert pipe worth (I guess) $500 has been moved at a cost (I guess) of $1,000.

So while the basic and urgent need may be for a public works department storage yard, surely first there is need for procedures to authorize the disposal of unneeded material and establish yardsticks of inventory. Then we will be sure that the storage yard is not too large.

Youth

Dear Editor:

This is not in the form of a critique of the Davis Madrigal Singers who so charmingly performed on Wednesday afternoon, May 11, courtesy of The Carmel Foundation. It is a note of appreciation of this group of young Americans who touched the heart, of an "expatriate-returned-home," for a blessed fleeting moment in time. May I, please, request that you will be so kind as to pass this on to them as I do not know of their address?

After years of being told, and reading of, the hopelessness of drug-imbibing, rebelling (or is "coping-out" the expression) American youths it is so nice to come home to America and be assured by this ensemble of youths, with their fresh and glowing good looks, that youth is as beautiful as the nostalgic memories of youth past.

Their heartwarming desire to please their audience of raptly interested "retirees," (not one reluctant-to-come-husband nodded off to sleep), on an, oh, so rare rainy May afternoon in Carmel, shone from their faces.

As I sat listening to this ancient form of short poems set to music I was transferred halfway across the world to that land where those, oh, so tender days of May catch your breath, when the Hawthorn hedgerows, with their white blossoms, look like snow frostings on the emerald fields. Those rare days in England to make the heart ache and most resemble merrie old England of King Arthur fables. A Maying we will go!

The faces of the young ladies and gentlemen on stage were the counterpart of long ago fair damsels and chivalrous knights who joined their tender voices in the nostalgic melodies in some medieval court.

The young swains in their ruby, green and blue velvet doublets sported identical coiffures to those seen in portraits of court dandies. Milky white skinned damsels, too, could have passed for their ancestresses who were girl-women joining in the Court Madrigals. And so from a "stranger-in-a-village-by-the-sea" my genuine heartfelt gratitude for a rich moment in my travels through life.

THE WORLD OF BUDDY & HAPPY

Toby's leg is clamped in a leghold trap. For many hours he has lain in agony, until he could stand no more pain and went into shock. Some trapped animals gnaw their own leg through above the trap, suffering indescribable agony to regain their freedom. Death often follows.

Joe finds this dog in time to save him. Most animals are not so fortunate. For many years the more civilized people have fought against the use of these cruel leghold traps. They think human beings should use only painless ways to capture animals or to end their lives.

COUNCIL CHAMBERS WERE PACKED FRIDAY NIGHT as business and residential interests clashed over tour bus and truck delivery limitations. Here a member of the trucking industry addresses the council, explaining why his trucks can't make their deliveries early and be off Carmel streets by noon.

temporarily dropped

What started out as a day of discontent in Carmel ended with some notes of harmony — a compromise on the tour bus issue, a tabling of a proposal aimed at restricting truck deliveries, and the unanimous appointment of a new planning commissioner.

In council chambers jammed to the bursting point with local business people and residents, the council Friday night backed off on its proposed tour bus ban, and instead passed an emergency ordinance that moves the bus unloading zone to the east side of Carmel Plaza but does not allow the tour buses to park in Carmel. This summer, tour buses will only be allowed, with a few exceptions, to travel north to south on the truck route. The remainder of the city is off limits to most buses.

Truck delivery to Carmel businesses will go on as usual unless the council can come up with some mutually satisfactory proposal to restrict those deliveries to certain hours of the day. At the same time, the heads of two local delivery firms and a union official promised to encourage their drivers to be more considerate when double parking on Carmel streets.

Finally, the council, after individually checking out qualifications, unanimously agreed to the appointment of Dr. Manfred Prescott to the seat vacated by Thomas Hawley on the Carmel Planning Commission.

Tour buses

Although most of Friday night's discussion was spent on truck deliveries, the hottest issue was the proposed ordinance banning all tour buses from the city until the end of the water crisis. That issue was solved relatively quickly when Councilman Bernard Anderson suggested a compromise plan very similar to the one that was, in effect, rejected several months ago.

Tour buses will be allowed approximately four 15-minute unloading spaces on the west side of Junipero south of Ocean, to the south of Carmel Plaza's loading zone. After unloading, the buses will proceed south on the truck route to Highway 1 (with no U-turn on Junipero as previously proposed), and be responsible for finding their own parking places while their passengers visit Carmel. Coming back through the city to pick up their passengers, the buses will once more have to drive north to south.

This plan, as proposed earlier this spring, was made shelved for this summer's bus traffic by the refusal of council to give a declaration of negative environmental impact, thus making a lengthy environmental impact statement necessary.

But Anderson said that if buses were not allowed to park on the block between 7th and 8th streets (across from a residential section) and were not forced to make U-turns on Junipero, he would remove his objection to a negative declaration.

"Let's forget this business of trying to segregate tour buses from charters," Anderson said, referring to the proposed ban that would not effect point-to-point tour buses. Anderson said this kind of partial ban would present an "impossible situation for police."

Additionally, Anderson's move, he said, was made so that the issue would "quit dividing our town into two parts." The issue, Anderson said, has just been creating a lot of ill will.

After a discussion on legalities with City Attorney George Brehmer, the council moved to adopt the plan and Brehmer took a short recess to draw up an urgency ordinance to that effect. The urgency ordinance needs a four-fifths vote, but requires only one reading. After a unanimous vote by council, the tour bus regulations were made law, requiring only notification of the bus companies and the erection of signs before implementation.

Exceptions to the new bus regulations are MPT buses, school buses, parlor car carriers delivering visitors to Carmel hotels, and buses taking people out of and back to Carmel.

After a lengthy reading of the ordinance and a vote, Councilman David Hughes called it "The War and Peace of the bus situation."

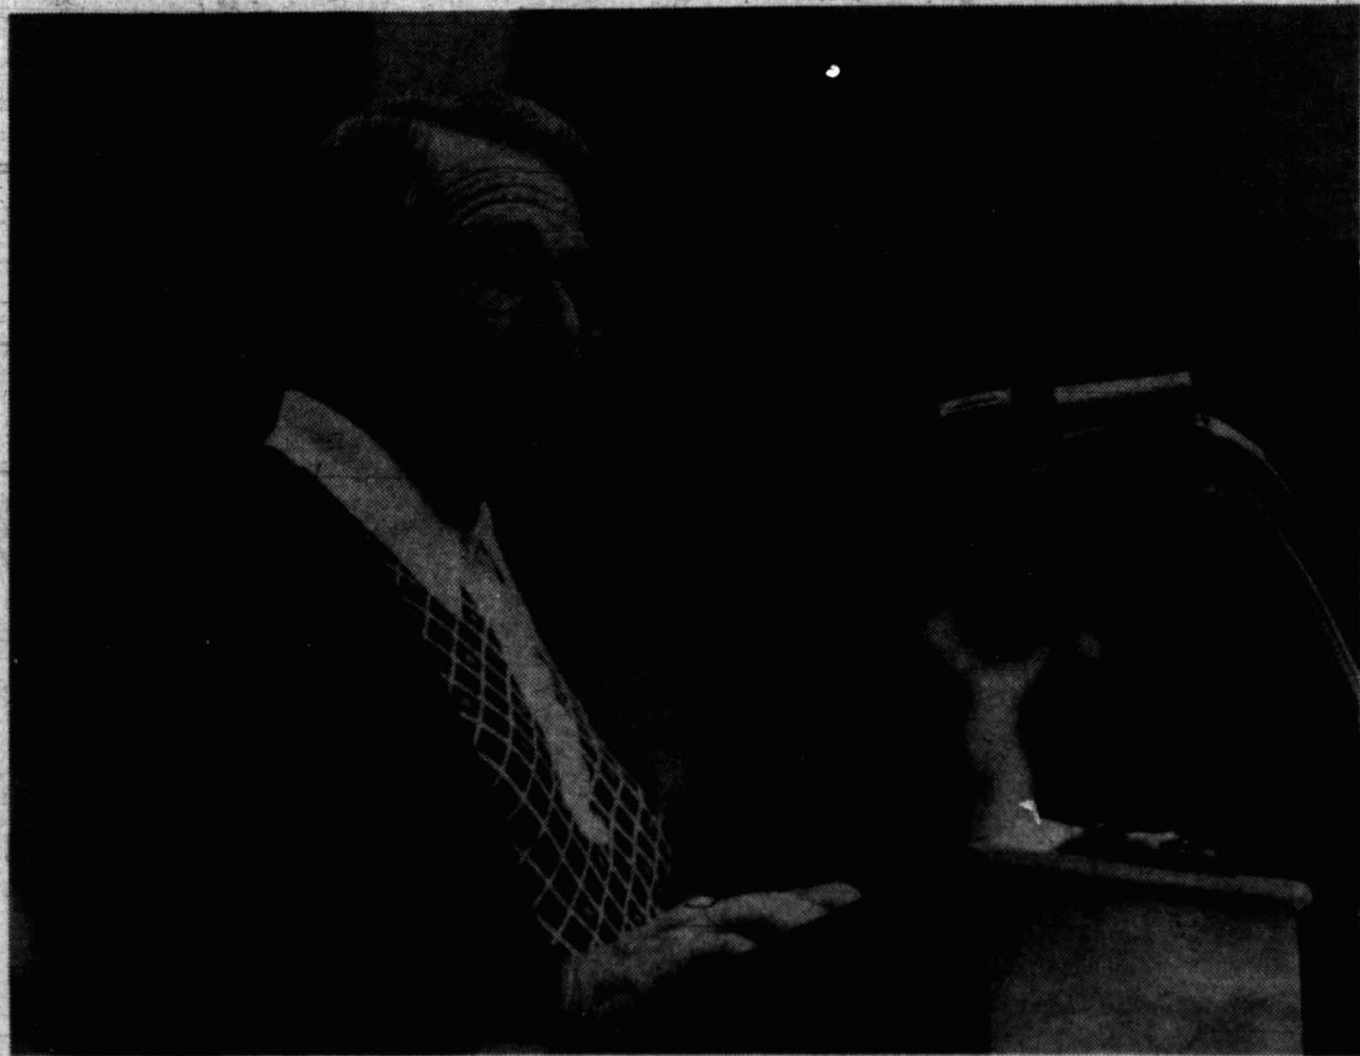

Councilman Mike Brown, who began the movement to control tour buses through legislation, showed relief, saying it had had a rather long gestation period — a year. But Brown actually had been working on the ordinance, or one very similar, for two years.

Deliveries

But the first big item on Friday night's agenda was the limitation of truck deliveries to Carmel. Council had been considering the possibility of stopping all truck deliveries after 10 a.m. or noon, with the aim of lessening congestion.

City Attorney Brehmer mentioned the voluntary program on Fisherman's

Friday morning

--An ominous beginning to a day of conflict between residential and business interests.

Last Friday was the 20th, but it seemed more like a week earlier — Friday the 13th.

The day started out with a surprise meeting of local merchants and businessmen at the La Playa Hotel. Ominously, no press was allowed in and no one would say much about what had gone on, but the subject of the conference was reportedly the upcoming evening meeting of the Carmel City Council and the growing hostility between the business and residential sections of Carmel.

Slated for that unusual Friday night council meeting was: the second reading of an ordinance banning tour buses during the water crisis, proposed legislation on truck deliveries, and another possibly controversial appointment to the planning commission.

Later in the afternoon, an open letter "To Members of the Carmel Business Community" was circulated around town, paper-clipped to a Carmel Business Association survey on truck deliveries and tour bus desirability. Accompanying some packets was a small card estimating that over 70 percent of the city's budget is business generated. At the evening's council meeting, CBA President Dale Leidig emphatically denied that the CBA had any part in the letter attached to the CBA survey.

The open letter to the business community warns of the proposed tour bus ban, the restriction of truck service to Carmel businesses, and alleged stacking of the planning commission with members of Old Carmel.

"What's happening here," the letter states, "is a series of actions by Mayor Norberg with a controlled majority on the Council that is derisive and harmful, separating and establishing the community as Residential and Anti-Business in character."

Urging business people to "get active," "state your views" and "participate," the letter asserts:

"The business people in Carmel have made a major investment of personal funds in their individual enterprises. They are articulate, have helped to establish an excellence of product and services and shop decor that is renowned throughout the country and abroad. And this same esprit has helped to establish and support the high standards that have brought acclaim to our community, endeavors in art, music and theatre. People who have businesses here are a vital part of these activities and help to support them with their presence and, importantly, their financial contributions."

The letter — unsigned — ends with a note of sharp warning to Carmel business people: "So, once again, entrepreneurs, rally! Norberg's Noose is being fitted for all of you."

Council compromises..

Wharf and suggested a voluntary program coordinated by the CBA. He also suggested that state legislation might be passed recognizing unique problems in unique cities. But, said Brehmer, he could find no instance of a city regulating such things itself, saying, "We're left with a situation where we have to be very creative."

Former Carmel Mayor Barney Laiola recalled actions several years ago that permitted trucks to double park on one side of the street only, but said that anything further would have required Carmel merchants to pick up their wares in Monterey.

Speaking against the council's proposed restrictions were Bob Weeks of California Motor Express and John Meyer of Pacific Motor Trucking, both from Salinas. Both said that work begins on unloading long distance trucks and reloading locals at 8 a.m. every morning in Salinas. Carmel has its own trucks, but they can't possibly finish in Carmel before 2 p.m., according to Meyer.

Several local merchants spoke out against restricting delivery times, including CBA President Dale Leidig whose partial survey of businesses found that the large majority would not like delivery restrictions.

Ed Gay, head of Teamsters Union Local 890, got up to say he had once been a deliveryman "with the Carmel route himself and said he didn't feel his union could possibly service the Carmel area under the proposed restrictions."

Howard Brunn, member of Old Carmel and businessman, said that he had been talking to many of the truck drivers themselves and felt the problem wasn't unsolvable. He suggested some kind of delivery time restriction to clear congestion. "Let's let people on the streets," he said, "so people can come in to buy your merchandise."

After several personal comments directed at councilmen by the audience, Anderson moved to table the ordinance and it was approved 4-1 with Norberg dissenting.

Appointments play a part --in the present conflict between the residential and business community

Council policies aren't the only thing that worry Carmel business people. So do appointments to study groups and commissions.

A bitter fight was waged over the appointment of Les Gross to the Carmel Planning Commission this spring. Mayor Gunnar Norberg's committee to study the tour bus situation was comprised almost entirely of members of Old Carmel. Then came the appointment of Dr. Donald Davidson to the Planning Commission. Davidson is considered one of the leaders of the Old Carmel movement.

Fear exists on the part of business people that the committees and commissions of Carmel are being stacked against them, particularly the Planning Commission. But Dr. Davidson professes to want peace between the two factions and at Friday night's meeting Dr. Manfred Prescott was appointed with unanimous council approval.

Davidson:

"Both residents and business people want to keep Carmel attractive," Davidson claims. The reasons for keeping the city attractive might differ, he admits, "but the end goal is the same."

practice in Monterey with a group of other physicians took a great deal of his time. So he, like many other Carmel residents, found himself accepting more and more changes in the business district; but along with these changes came a growing feeling of frustration.

In 1975 Davidson moved his medical practice to Carmel. He now shares an office with Dr. Donald Scanlon in the downtown area. He feels moving his practice to Carmel gave him a deeper commitment to preserving those things that attracted him to Carmel in the first place — things such as the beach area, the climate and the cosmopolitan business section. Yet he intentionally stayed out of active community involvement because of personal reasons. He explains that he had been in an automobile accident earlier that year and he felt he needed to give all his energy to his patients.

When the Village Corner was threatened with closure in September 1976, Davidson watched the incident very carefully. But he still hesitated about becoming involved in community work. Later that he attended one of Old Carmel's weekly meetings. At his second weekly meeting, he volunteered to chair the telephone committee and from that point on, he has worked actively with the Old Carmel committee.

"My involvement with Old Carmel brought an awareness of what's going on in city government," Davidson says. For one thing, he began attending city council meetings regularly. "Like most residents, I would hear the council had done this or that; but, I did not take the time to really check into any of the issues," he says. Now he does.

When asked if his applying for an appointment on the planning commission was directly related to the work he was doing with Old Carmel, Davidson replied: "I think that it is — sort of. The energy I was putting in Old Carmel was to 'do something that involved preserving the heritage tradition, flavor, tone — however you want to describe what is attractive about Carmel. Being on the planning commission is a way of having a little more authoritative position of achieving this same goal."

But Davidson does not feel he is wed to Old Carmel as a planning commissioner and objects to being labeled as Old Carmel's hand-picked planning commissioner. To label him as such, he feels, is an exaggeration and a misconception. He says, "My point of view is going to be consistently coming from the preamble to Article I of the zoning regulation. I agreed with this before joining Old Carmel. I think many Old Carmel members share this belief; so, if that means I'm going to be reflecting points of view that Old Carmel sometimes shares, that's true."

Davidson went on to say,

"That does not mean I'm going to be anti-business — and I don't think Old Carmel is anti-business either." He is disturbed by the growing split between the business interests and the residents. He feels that there should be no separation because, basically, the two groups have the same goal, which he says is to preserve the town of Carmel. He feels an inharmonious atmosphere between the two factions is detrimental to the town.

"No one wants to see Carmel become a totally tourist oriented town, in my opinion," says Davidson. He observes that there are three kinds of shops in Carmel: Those that are totally oriented toward residents, those that are oriented toward residents and tourists and those that are totally oriented toward tourists.

"When the third category (tourist oriented businesses) begins to proliferate as I believe it has done in the last five to ten years, the character of the town changes," says Davidson. He adds, "I want people to come to Carmel and realize that what they have heard is true — that it is part of a living community, even when they are in the middle of the business district."

Tourist oriented businesses encourage only day visitors who contribute very little to the town socially and economically, in Davidson's opinion. He feels we are moving down the

'Kiss Me Kate' at CHS

Sweet and light production

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

A successful play is not unlike a candy Life Saver. It momentarily quells a pang of some sort. It tastes reasonably good going down. It leaves a fleeting impression.

The current production of Cole Porter's "Kiss Me Kate," staged by the Carmel High drama department is that sort of tasty tid bit.

The play will continue Thursday through Saturday, May 26-28, at 8 p.m. in Room 2 of the high school.

Considering what they've got to work with, the cast has made a meal out of one of Porter's less worthy musical comedies. The same man who brought you such unmemorables as "Anything Goes" ('34) and "Can Can" ('53), snatched a plot right out of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," twisted a few facts, baked at 275 for 90 minutes, and came up with Kate.

The play concerns itself with a Shakespearean actor's travelling troupe which has somehow enmeshed the actor's own life around Shakespeare's play within a play.

A good criterion to set for the success of any musical is simply being able to discern the words.

Nary a word is lost in the Carmel High production, but then, the only accompaniment to lose it to is an aggressive piano at the hands of Jason Anderson.

They manage to make good music together.

For some reason, miscues in a musical are always forgivable. The banging and clanging of moving scenery, and lines lost hither and thither are absolved if not absorbed by the next song.

The play is (if you'll pardon the express) no less corny than Kansas in August. Or is that Monterey in May? Imagine, if you will, a dozen songs and million words all revolving around a single kiss from Kate.

Musical direction is by Cathy Collins and choreography by Lucretia Butler. Ms. Butler has worked a minor miracle. You couldn't find even a

This special presentation will be held Thursday, May 26, 3:30 p.m. at Sunset Theatre under the auspices of the City of Carmel and the Cultural Commission. It will be offered free to the community and all are invited to attend.

Carmel High School established their program eight years ago while Seaside's program offered only folk dancing until five years ago, when Carol Surman arrived to take over a Department of Dance. At Carmel High School, Marikay Bridges has established a full program of dance, including a new division in the Production Arts Department so that faculty and students can work on an interdisciplinary basis. Both groups perform before many schools and organizations and many of the students continue their studies at the Perry-Mansfield Dance Camp in Steamboat Springs, Colorado, as well as with college and university programs. The Misses Surman and Bridges take the young dancers to workshops, dance performances of professional companies to give them more background in the art. Most of the dance programs in both schools are self-supporting. This has put the burden of money raising on the department for extra-curricular performances. Funds are raised for scholarships and touring.

There is no facility for properly performing dance; Seaside High School has no theatre; Carmel High School lacks an adequate stage for mounting dance.

Hartnell summer theatre planned

Individual tickets and series passes are now available for Hartnell College's summer theater program which will consist of four productions.

"The Glass Menagerie" by Tennessee Williams is a warm human drama about the Wingfield family and the illusions they create to make life bearable. This drama will be staged June 15 through July 3.

Rogers and Hammerstein's Broadway hit musical "Oklahoma" depicts the boisterous pioneer days of the Oklahoma land rush. Performance dates for this musical are July 6 through July 17.

Next on the schedule is "A Flea in Her Ear" by Georges Feydeau, the grand master of the French bedroom farce. A doubting wife, her perplexed husband, a jealous Spaniard with a pistol, a drunken hotel porter and a lecherous Prussian are just some of the characters in this comedy on stage July 15 through July 31.

The final play will be "Archy and Mehitabel." Archy is a poet cockroach who produces his literary masterpieces by leaping from key to key of a newspaperman's typewriter. This lighthearted musical comedy will be performed July 27 through July 31.

To order tickets for the summer program call the Hartnell box office at 758-9191 or write the college at 156 Homestead Ave., Salinas, CA 93901.

Tile painting for children

Diane Swift, the Peninsula's painter of ceramic tiles, will be doing something new at Countrywide Crafts in Carmel Rancho Shopping Center on Sunday afternoon, May 29. She will be showing children (of any age) how to paint their own tiles and will take their creations with her to glaze and fire them.

Children who want to do tile painting should come between noon and 3 p.m. on Sunday, May 29, wearing work clothing. The cost to the parents for a permanent memento, which can be used as a trivet for Mom or a picture for Dad, will be ten dollars. Countrywide Crafts, which has been showing crafts from all across the United States, is at the Barnyard — off Highway One and Carmel Rancho Boulevard.

The Children's Experimental Theatre will be presenting seven different productions June 3-12 as its "gift to the community."

Under the direction of Marcia Hovick, fairy tales, folk stories and historical plays will be staged at the Forest Theater-in-the-Ground. Each child in the theater group will have a chance to perform.

Plays scheduled for Children's Theatre

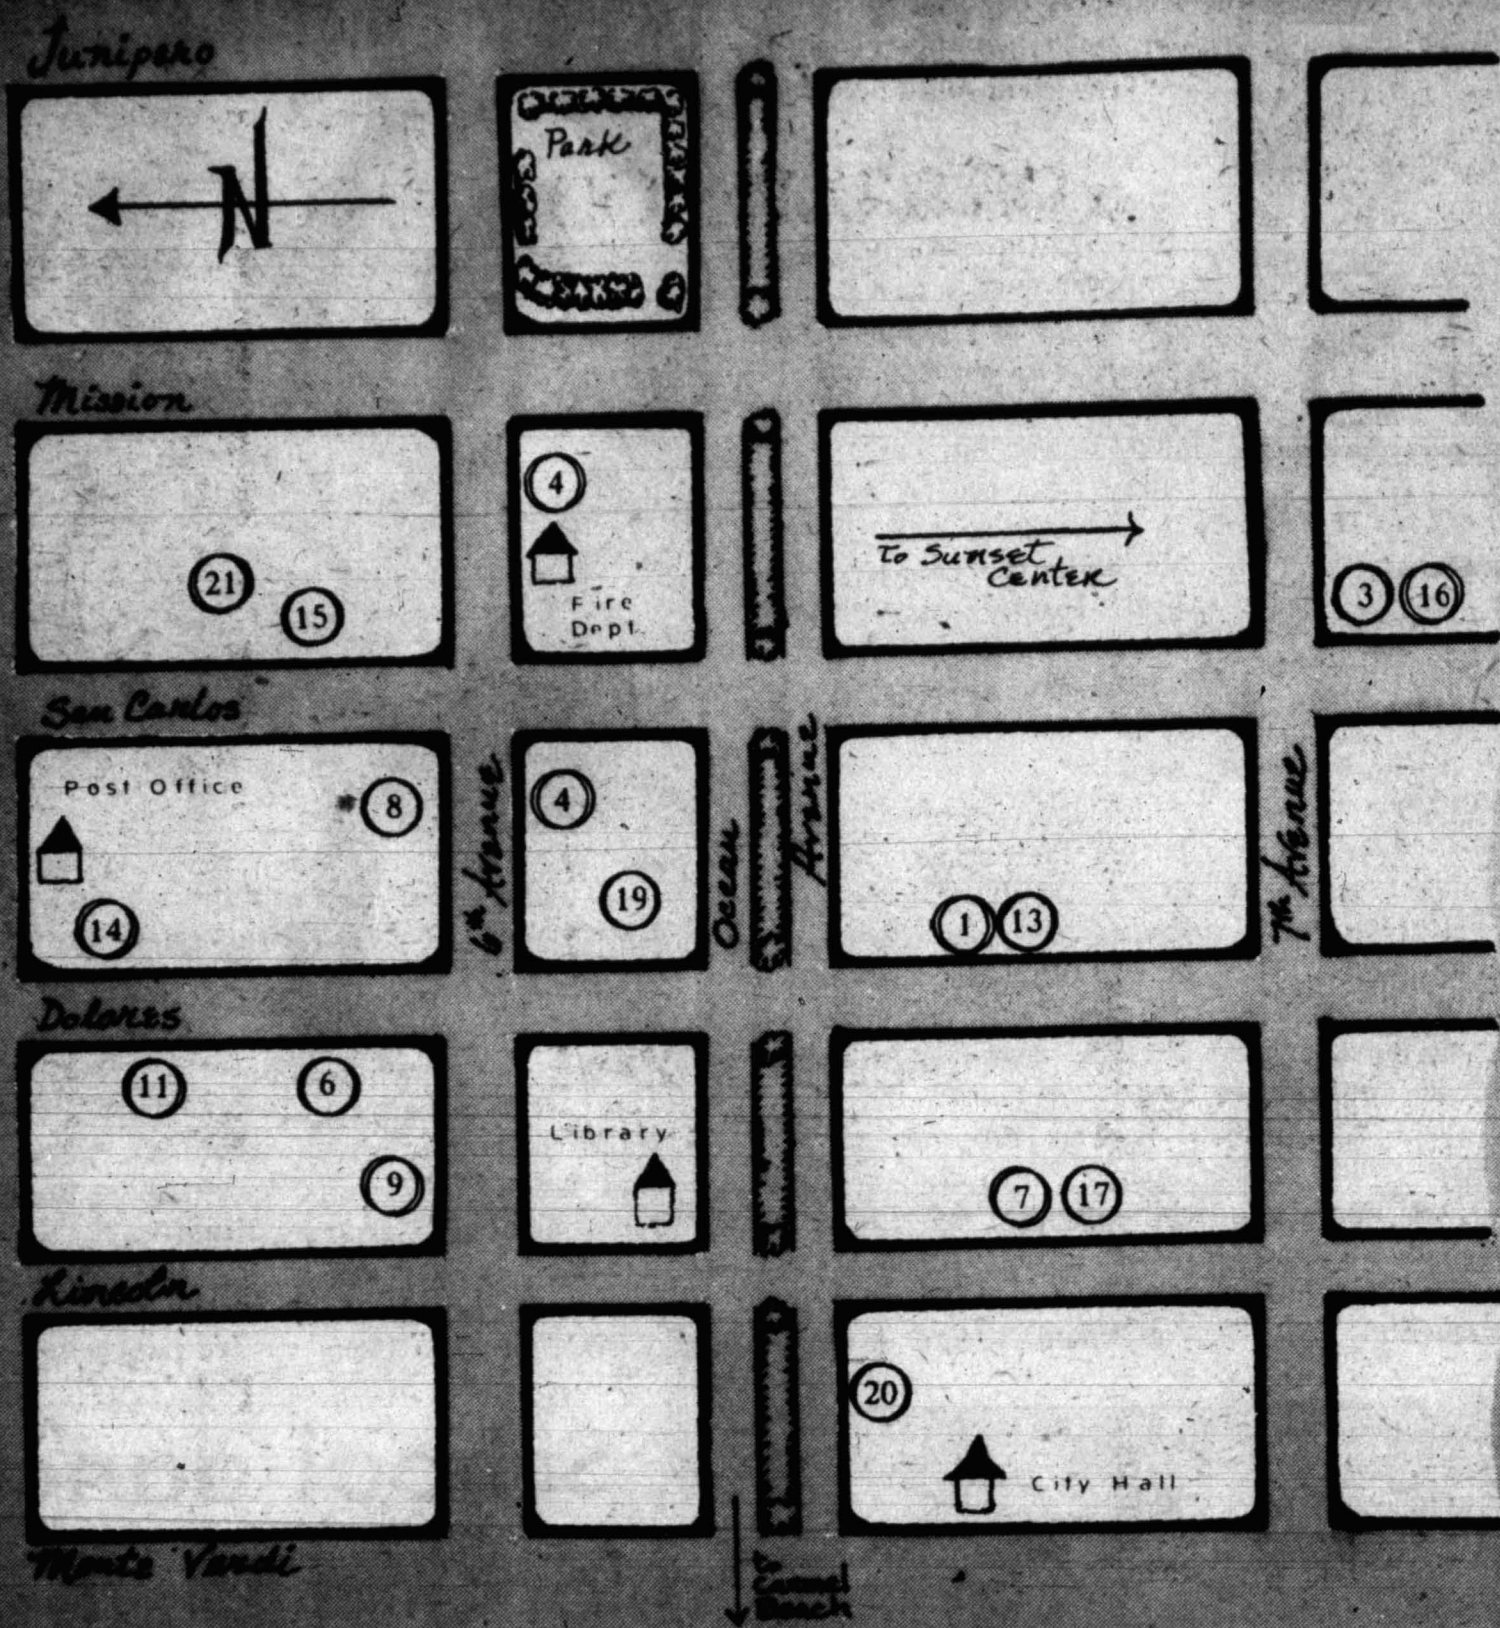

The senior group, consisting of high school and college age young people, will present three plays at various times during the week. Other plays will be performed by the younger children all day Saturday and Sunday both weekends.

A detailed schedule of performances will be released at a later date.

THE MONTEREY POPS CONCERT, held last weekend at the Monterey Fairgrounds, ended the Monterey County Symphony's season.

Music Corner...

harmonic rhythm of Rubinstein are merged into performances of incomparable unity, coherence, and consummate homogeneity.

The tone quality of the two instruments is superb, while the sonic characteristics are perfectly registered. This disc is most highly recommended, as an example of music-making by two of the world's greatest technicians on their respective instruments, whose only interest is a vibrant, emphatic, and expressive definition of the wonderful music of Brahms in these two sonatas for cello and piano.

SCHUBERT: THE "TROUT" QUINTET (Tashi Group, with guest artists — RCA-ARLI-1882).

The Schubert Quintet in A major for Piano and Strings, Op. 114, subtitled "The Trout," is one of the first piano quintets ever written, but it is not for a traditional combination. The instruments here called for are a piano, violin, viola, cello, and double bass. This work is entitled "Die Forellen" ("Trout") because the fourth movement quotes Schubert's song of that name. Schubert wrote this quintet during one of the rare happy periods in his life, a walking trip in Upper Austria, which brought him to the hospitable household of Sylvester Paumgartner in Steyr. The host suggested that he write a chamber music work based on the song "The Trout," and Schubert graciously complied by sitting down and writing out the string parts of a new work; when this composition was introduced in Paumgartner's house, Schubert played the piano part from memory.

Tashi (meaning good fortune in Tibetan) Group consists of the following musicians: Peter Serkin, piano; Ida Kavafian, viola; and Fred Sherry, cello. The guest artists on this recording are: Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Buell Neidlinger, double bass. This ensemble plays the work in a light spirit, with immense gusto and inordinate technical bravura. There is a sensitivity and a subtlety, as well as a refined elegance, to their approach. Their skill is spontaneous, charming; their arpeggiated passages are scintillating, and their lyric and melodic evocation is wistful, haunting, and full of poesy.

There are many recordings of excellent quality of this work, and the present performance may be considered as belonging to the best of them. It is, therefore, recommended in this spirit, and also because of the exceptional pianism of Peter Serkin.

TCHAIKOVSKY: PIANO CONCERTO NO. 1 IN B-FLAT MINOR; LISZT: CONCERTO NO. 1 IN E-FLAT (Horacio Gutierrez, Pianist with the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Andre Previn — Angel S-37177).

The Tchaikovsky Concerto, one of the most popular in the entire repertory, begins with a long introduction whose sweeping first theme in the strings against powerful piano chords, is one of the composer's most famous melodies.

Curiously enough, this impressive subject is never again used in the movement. The main section has two themes: a vitally rhythmic folk tune for piano and a lyrical subject first stated by horns and woodwinds, and then assumed by the piano. The second movement begins with a tender song for the flute. After a second melody in oboe and clarinet, a sweeping waltz, said to have been adapted from a French song, is presented by violins and cellos. Unbridled energy is released in the finale with a rhythmic folk dance in the piano. A contrast comes from a haunting folk-like song in the violins accompanied by horns. In the coda, the composer returns to his first vigorous dance tune.

The London Symphony Orchestra under Andre Previn, has never sounded better, and they give him an accompaniment that is brilliant, secure, solid, and persuasive. There is an openness and a functional balance and rapport with the soloist that is rarely heard, with a magnificent spaciousness.

Japanese Folk Art Ceramics on Display

It's been said that the finest Japanese Ceramic pieces come from the countryside of the Kyoto area. There, the peasants have long used a process involving several wooden kiln chambers of different degrees of heat.

As the pottery slowly bakes in more and more heat, it takes on a rough, color-encrusted finish which is also very utilitarian. This process produces a wide variety of ceramics — each unique and full of its own textured beauty.

The Igrek Company of Japan is presenting select pieces from this area, handmade by Tsuguhara Kanzake. These prime examples of Japanese Folk Art ceramics are on display at Ethnic Arts, Fisherman's Wharf, located in the Wharf Theatre building.

Sunset Views:

By RICHARD TYLER
Director, SCCC

It will be rather quiet at the Center this week. No programming is scheduled for the Memorial Day weekend. Bridge will be available and the Art classes and Dale Carnegie course will meet as usual.

This gives me an opportunity to consider the projects planned for the Cultural Department of the City — and hopefully we will have some comments from the community to help realize our goals.

Preliminary drawings have been submitted by Mr. Harry Tsugawa's office for a five-year plan for the improvement and replanting of the Forest Theater. They are being studied by various commissions and groups involved in the theatre. The area defined as the Forest Theater is primarily devoted to the performing arts and therefore the needs of performance and the conveniences for an audience are prime considerations in reviewing the designs. The concerns of developing the area for more comfort must be restrained in consideration of the "look" of the forest. Many interested citizens have come in to look at the drawings and I have gathered much from their comments.

An anonymous gift has made it possible to continue the renovating of the facilities in the main building. As specifically stated, the gift requests that we undertake the remodeling of Room No. 20. It should serve a multi-purpose; i.e., meeting room, lecture and recital hall. It will be designed to compliment the decor of the completed north section of the building. Olaf Dahlstrand, who designed other portions of this section, is at work to present some preliminary designs for the room as well as the hallway and staircase. This project brings us closer to a goal to remodel and refurbish the area for a more beautiful community building.

There are other projects and programs under consideration and a constant re-evaluation of the existing policies and activities. I have requests for classes, for films, for dance series, and inquiries about theatre performances. The Sunday Afternoons at the Forest Theater have been scheduled and we shall announce that program in a few weeks. There are discussions under way for performing groups in the community to plan presentations in Sunset Theatre as well as Forest Theater for later in the year — exciting ideas which need encouragement.

In the past few months we have been visited by many numbers of cultural and community organizations. Invariably, they are surprised at the myriad of activities in the building as well as our program schedules. They ask questions that will help their centers reach our level of excellence. Our staff has taken these visitors on tours of the building and premises and I am sure they leave with a greater appreciation and understanding of how Carmel approaches its needs and desires for a cultural tradition.

The City of Carmel offers its citizens an opportunity that many larger communities have yet to realize. We have a tradition of music, of art, and a strong desire to rekindle a theatrical environment. Our growth in festivals and musical series are the envy of many other communities and the cooperation of the City Council, the dedication of a Cultural Commission, and the involvement of the community will not let this cherished and recognized environment falter.

Since Sunset Center will not have any stage presentation this week, perhaps you might want to attend the Festival of Culture held through June 11 in Bachok, Malaysia.

AFS student Roberto Vega

Life here was not as easy as expected

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

Street.

Mention the word street to someone. They'll probably tell you it's a place where people get mugged — or run over.

But street means something else to Roberto Francisco Vega-Mariani. For the past year he's been the American Field Service foreign exchange student at Carmel High.

For the past year he's also come to understand that a street in Carmel, California is quite unlike a street in his native town Piura, Peru.

"In Peru you make your friends in the streets. Meet someone once and you're friends forever."

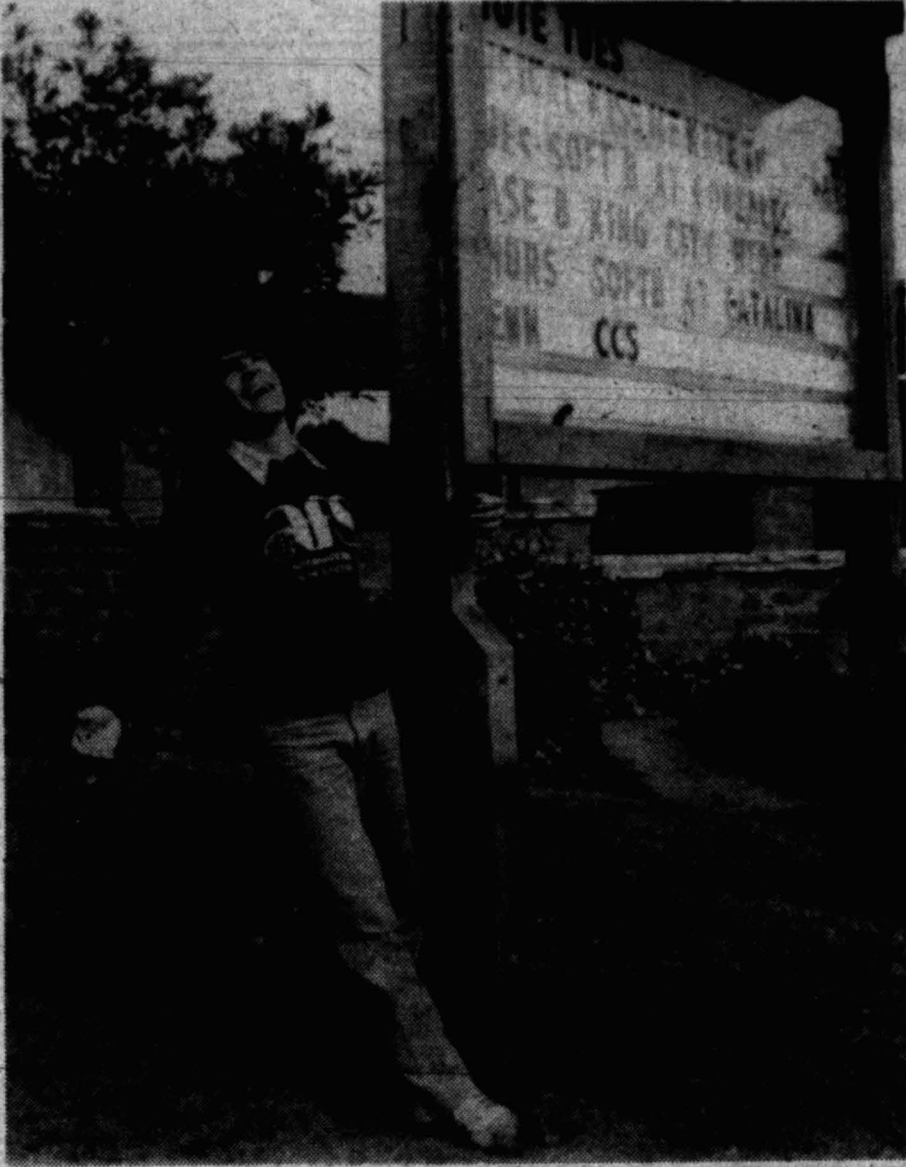

But not here. He doesn't know why but the road to friendship in this country has a lot more twists and turns.

"What do you see in the streets here?" he asks, then answers his own question with a long silence.

Nothing.

When Roberto came to Carmel and moved in with his American "parents" David and Beatrice Leonard, he spoke no English.

One year later he's

IN PERU everyone talks about the "easy life" in America. Life at Carmel High came a bit less easy than Roberto Vega expected — but he takes time to give us an easy-going pose.

speaking it with the fervor of a native. He thanks his "parents" and an intangible called necessity for that. But when he returns to Peru on his birthday, July 10th, he'll be taking home something more than a knowledge of our language.

He's also taking home a knowledge of us.

He likes the way young people here leave home so much earlier than the young in Peru. He's envious that American high school students have employment opportunities while in school.

Not in Peru. Not a chance. Roberto explains, "In Peru a high school student has no time for a job. We are always studying. Always busy, busy, busy."

Another reason: There aren't any jobs to be had. "Even if there were, our parents wouldn't let us take them," he says.

He likes the integration of boys and girls in high schools here. In Peru they are strictly separated.

In America he can select his classes. In Peru they were rigidly assigned.

The only sport Peru offered him was soccer. Here he also took up water polo, swimming, and he's even learned how to hoop a few baskets.

Worst of all he was graded on a monthly basis in Peru. Imagine, report cards twelve times a year.

They keep close track of American life in Peru, says Roberto. Fantasies about the "easy" life in the U.S. spread quickly — especially via screen.

Even translated into Spanish, shows like "The Six Million Dollar Man" and movies like "The Godfather" offer the Peruvians a "different" picture of American life from the way Roberto has found it to be.

In some ways, life is a little less free here than Roberto expected. "I still can't believe when I see cars stopping for red lights at night. Even with no traffic they actually wait for the light to turn green."

In Peru, Roberto claims, drivers stop only to blow their horns.

But here, he can't blow his. AFS students aren't allowed to drive or hitchhike. He's had trouble adjusting to this and to some other rules. Especially the one that tells him he must be 21 to drink.

"In this country kids have to be sneaky," he says. But it's no big deal in Peru. It's more or less accepted.

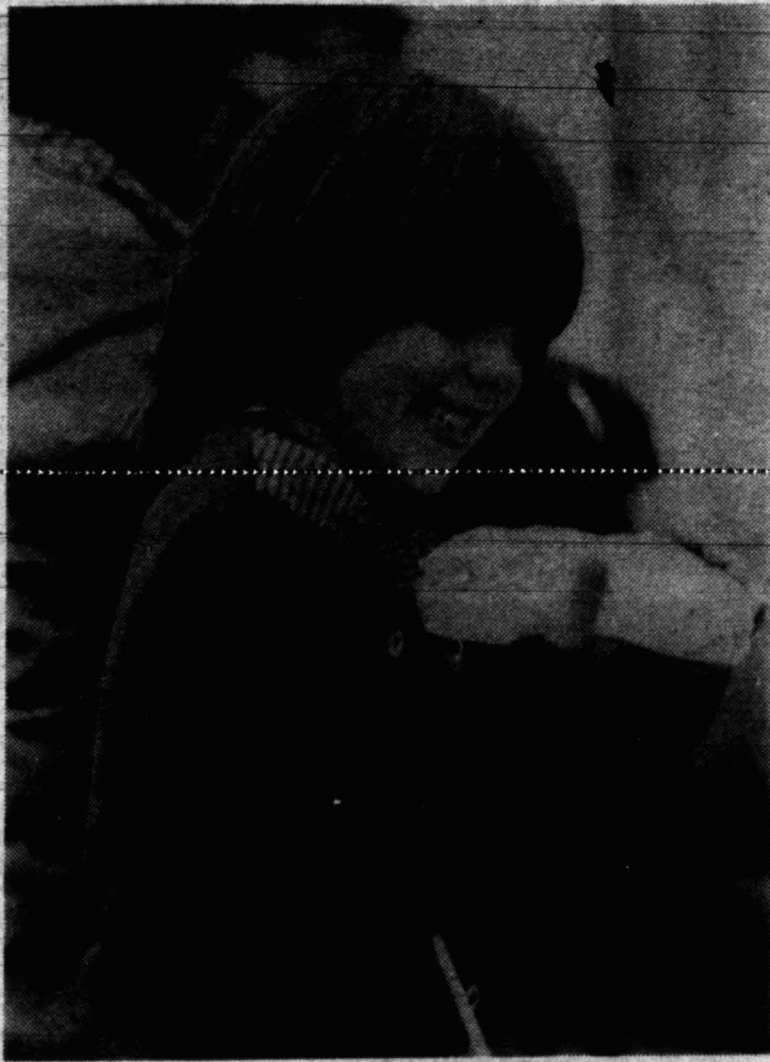

Roberto's blue jeans, tennis shoes and backpack are only symbols of all he's learned here. The real possessions he's gained can't be worn on his body or packed in a suitcase.

And now he's taking it all home. Back to the streets of Peru.

Family day at Carmel Little League

What would Carmel Little League Family Day be without hamburgers? Not much fun for six year old Jackie Fuller (above) whose dad Dave manages the Carmel Plaza team. The team's become a family affair with Jackie's mom Dorothy keeping team records on the sideline and her two sisters Amy and Tammy playing on the team. "Jackie's favorite spot is the snack bar," jokes her mom. Jackie certainly seemed to enjoy her hamburger at last Saturday's festivities.

At left, "Mr. Baseball" Jerry Artellan waits his turn on the cakewalk with his granddaughter Michele Bunch. Artellan, who spends most of family day at the hamburger grill, was instrumental in starting little league baseball in Carmel. At right is a contestant in the home run derby, a popular event for dads, a few moms and league players. An automatic pitching machine gave the batters five perfectly thrown balls to convert into homeruns. Winner in the 15 and over division was Frank Lucido hitting three homers. Nelson Homen won the 14 and under division. Little League president Ken White termed the day "a big success." "We raised over $2,100 which clears debts already incurred and everyone had a warm, happy time," he says. Ken credits the success to co-ordinators Ken and Alice Bliesner who worked with Gary and Janet Childs, Frank and Dorothy Lucido, and the many parents and community members who helped with donations and their time.

Old Carmel sets benefit tennis tournament

Old Carmel is sponsoring Carmel's First Annual Benefit Tennis Tournament. It is scheduled for June 16-19.

The tournament will be mixed doubles for adults and a doubles tournament for juniors ages 11 through 18. Old Carmel's Senior Citizen Committee feels there is a need to establish a non-profit residential care home in Carmel for Carmel senior citizens on fixed incomes. The home would be for "in between" seniors, who are not quite able to exist alone, but are far from the complete dependence of a nursing home.

The benefits from this tennis tournament will start a fund to establish such a facility for the "in between" seniors. One Old Carmel member explained that the home could prevent the "final dehumanizing step" that a nursing home, with all its changes, means to a senior citizen.

Persons interested in playing in the tournament may call tournament director Lee Underwood at 624-4335 for information. Donations will be accepted from non-players and will be collected by Old Carmel members.

Tournament play will take place on the courts at Carmel Woods, Carmel High, Middle School and at the Mission Ranch, June 16-19, with finals set for that weekend.

Chairman for the tournament is Howard Brunn and members of the tournament committee are General Tom Shelburne, Dr. Don Davidson, Ron and Mary Wagner, Florence Stiles, Bob Siler and Rigdon Bell.

CUSD

Krovetz to leave CHS

by BRUCE HOROVITZ

The CUSD Board of Education disclosed at Tuesday night's meeting that the district has lost an assistant principal, maintained two productive programs at their primary schools, and gained a human skeleton — not as a board member — but as an instructional tool to be used at Carmel High.

Dr. Martin Krovetz, who has served the past three years as the Assistant Principal of Carmel High submitted a letter of resignation to the board. He will take on the position of principal at Harbor High School in Santa Cruz, effective July 1st.

Although Krovetz was not present at the meeting, the board accepted his resignation, as well as the resignation of Priscilla Nesbitt, who has been teaching in the Carmel schools since 1960.

The board later listened to committees of administrators and teachers from the primary schools, propound, with the aid of facts and figures, on the successful implementation of Early Childhood Education and Title I programs.

E.C.E. and Title I are state and a federally funded programs that assist elementary and secondary students in the basic skills of language arts, mathematics, and reading. They also encourage greater parent participation in the schools.

Committee Chairman Phil Smith told the board that the CUSD ranks 90th of 826 school districts involved in E.C.E. in California.

Two skeletons that have been hanging over the board were next both accepted.

One "skeleton" is a rather complex policy change regarding course and program approval in the CUSD. Drafts of the proposed revision had been presented to the board on two previous occasions. The drafts were found unacceptable both times.

Tuesday night's draft was finally approved by the board, but not without continued nitpicking, second guessing, and obvious un-settlement.

The other skeleton rattled before the board was a real one. They accepted, with deep gratitude, a human skeleton donated by Dr. Carl Leonard of Carmel. The structure will be used in the Science Department at Carmel High.

In other action the board: —adopted a revised policy change regarding administrative credentials and payment for teaching principals.

—authorized the county superintendent of schools to transfer funds from the undisturbed reserve as necessary to permit payment of obligations incurred by the CSUD during the 1976-77 school year.

—authorized the expenditure of $1,377 for membership dues to the California School Board Association.

—arranged for the irrigation of district shrubbery by agreeing upon the rental of a truck and 1,000 gallon water tank complete with pump and hose from June through October for $140.00 per month.

The board concluded the meeting by going into executive session (closed meeting) regarding matters of district personnel.

The next scheduled CUSD Board meeting is June 14th at 7:30 p.m. in the Carmel Middle School Library.

Monterey Pops Concert

Cloudy day---sunny music and balloons

BALLOONS aplenty soared with the music at the 13th annual Monterey Symphony Pops Concert Sunday afternoon.

It was a gray Sunday almost everywhere but at the Fairgrounds where it was bright with gay balloons and lilting music. The annual Monterey Symphony "Pops" Concert drew a large crowd of all ages and types and everyone was well rewarded by the beautiful music and the happy atmosphere.

The doors opened at noon and families and friends streamed in to picnic and socialize prior to the performance. Then Maestro Haymo Taueber ascended the podium and the music began. From the rousing El Capitan March to the melodious medley from My Fair Lady and on to the toe tapping finale of Stars and Stripes Forever, the audience was thrilled and responded with one ovation after another.

The program, which was under the direction of Laurie Hubbard Tompkins, is part of a continuing educational series for young people in the area. Thus far some 216 demonstrations have been given in the schools for third and fourth graders. These demonstrations cover percussion instruments, strings, brass and woodwinds. Students can listen, ask questions and learn the many aspects of good music. In response to this program, fourth graders in many of the schools created their own posters with music as they see it. These posters were on display in the hall on Sunday and were certainly colorful and imaginative.

It was a delightful afternoon and a great finale for this year's Symphony season.

SOME FOLKS came to hear the music. But not this little girl. She's holding firm to her day's catch.

Saturday at Robert Louis Stevenson School was Family Day and a rather "rowdy" affair it was. Parents and students met in the morning for a series of athletic events, a title that proved to be a bit of a misnomer for most. Mothers and fathers joined their young people in tennis, archery, golf, frisbee, softball, volleyball, sack races and climaxed with a tug of war. The tug of war pitted the over 30's against the under 30's and would you believe, the "senior citizens" won. Of course, they did cheat just a bit by tying the end of the rope to Wally Goodwin's Bronco and using it as a member of their team. Everyone took a break from their athletic endeavors with a picnic lunch. The lunches covered the gamut from peanut butter and jelly sandwiches in the classic little hamper to the huge charcoal grill and a table set complete with a candelabra. How classy can a picnic be?

On to more "classy picnics" on Sunday at the Fairgrounds. There, spread out under the trees were Sue and Rod Dewar, Betty and Dick Ghent with Phyllis Carminati, the Heids and the Taeubers. Also joining the "pops" enthusiasts were the McFarrens, Anita Lasseter, the Kenneth Hollands, A.J. Taylors and the Peter Wrights. The boutique did a good business, partly because the boxes were covered with sheet music. One couldn't imagine a more colorful day.

Sunday night members of the Night Owls Chapter of the Children's Home Society met at La Playa for "Threads of Nostalgia". After tasting each of the Monterey Vineyard's wines and nibbling on cheese from the Mediterranean Market, the show began. Jean Schofield, President of the chapter, was the commentator for this unusual presentation of "fashion". She took us back to the years of crepe de chine, pongee and satin. We were reminded of the daring young ladies of the 20's who revealed "the knee" for the first time. Models then displayed all these creations from The Reincarnation of Cannery Row. The gowns featured everything from black touched with flesh covered lace, beads, satin and fur, paniers and even the WACS, WAVES, Grey Ladies and Rosie the Riveter. Presenting entertainment for the evening were members of the cast of Wharf Theater's "A Little Night Music". All proceeds went to the Children's Home Society which is the largest adoption agency in the United States.

This Friday evening promises to be one of the most gala in a long time. Norma Jean Hodges, who is well known in musical circles and Mary Margaret Graham, who is coming out of a period of retirement, will be presenting a Musical Evening at the home of Lucille and Henry Huntington. Mrs. Hodges, will present a group of Italian arias and Mrs. Graham will do a medley of French songs. They will join voices in a group of operatic duets. A special guest will be Major William Rusinak, who retired recently as the conductor of the Marine Corps Band, in Washington D.C., Major Rusinak conducted the White House official band through the past five Presidents and was honored by President Carter at a special ceremony during the visit of Prime Minister Trudeau. The Major invited his friend Norma Jean Hodges to appear with his band at the White House in April which was a thrill of a lifetime, as Mrs. Hodges says. Friday night will be the premiere performance for the two sopranos and their accompanist Elinor Avila — a premiere as a musical group — but from the response to the announcement of their union, we will be hearing a great deal more of them.

Saturday the Stillwater Yacht Club will open its sailing season with the Stuart Hedron Regatta. And speaking of yachting circles, Monterey Yacht Club will be having an open house on Monday, May 30th, to celebrate their 11th birthday. The Spinnakers, women's auxiliary of the Yacht Club, recently hosted their last dinner of the season, featuring grilled salmon and a movie about — you guessed it — yachting. Fran Harvey was in charge of the preparation and was ably assisted by Ruth Kalmbach, June Brownell, Flo Williams and Jenny Pack. Charlotte Loeb provided the flowers.

The week-end will bring Helen Lengfield down from Hillsborough to present a Monterey County Antique Show and Sale. Mrs. Lengfield, whose interests vary between golf and antiques, was here in December as the hostess of the California State Women's Amateur Golf Championship. This very busy lady was in charge of the Hillsborough Antique Show and Sale the week prior to that championship. Since she has combined forces with Virginia Stanton on this week's presentation at the Fairgrounds, it promises to be really exciting...with proceeds going to a variety of causes including the blind, deaf, the Museum and the Symphony.

And don't forget the Henri Corbat Jewelry Show at luncheon at Club XIX on Wednesday, June 1st. That will round out the week with just the perfect touch.

THE WITCHES scene from "Macbeth" was just one of the Shakespearean scenes presented by Walter Colton students during Renaissance Time held May 21 at MPC. The day-long event included many activities such as demonstrations of weaving, spinning, tumbling and juggling, a variety of musical entertainment, a puppet show and an art exhibit.

Personality Plus

With the upcoming Del Monte Kennel Club show on everyone's mind, it seemed logical to talk with Derek Rayne, our internationally known kennel judge.

As a boy in England, Derek Rayne began going to dog shows. He started showing Welsh Corgis and Fox Terriers over 40 years ago. For 38 years he has been a judge. There are only three other men who have been judging longer.

"You start out judging the breeds that you have," Rayne said. "You then progress to judge other breeds. The American Kennel Club makes the decision as to your qualifications to judge. Today I am licensed to judge 120 breeds."

At the beginning, a potential judge must write a descriptive piece on every breed he is going to judge. Usually someone watches the new judges to see how they are doing. They must also take an American Kennel Club examination.

Derek Rayne has been an all-breed judge for 27 years. There are only three others in California and twenty in the United States. "Each breed has a standard of points. It's somewhat like an architect's specifications," Rayne explains. "Just as one house might have an entirely different concept from another, it's the same way with judging dogs. The poodle doesn't have anything in common with the bulldog or the Doberman pinscher. Most of the dogs are of different origins and from different countries. Climate, atmosphere and their original purpose have changed the dogs through the years."

The standard of points for each dog is written down for the judge and it is his job to interpret those standards in order to choose the best. Some judges might attach more importance to the head, others to the coat or perhaps the gaits.

Rayne no longer shows his dogs. "My Corgi won the best in the Working Group at Madison Square Garden and I decided I couldn't do any better than that so I quit showing."

In the State of California each year there are about fifty shows. The largest is at Santa Barbara with over 4000 dogs. Derek Rayne is one of the judges there every year, and has judged every show in California at one time or another. So "I want people to come to Carmel and realize that what they have heard is true --that it is part of a living community."

scale of tourists and losing our long-term visitors who cared about and took an interest in the Carmel community.

Being realistic, Davidson notes Carmel cannot turn back the clock and have the charming mom and pop businesses dominate in the business district. "But we can go a few steps back," he says, "to regain the recently lost character of the community. 'I'm saying I don't want to see Carmel go any further in the direction it's been going (with emphasis on the day tourist) in the last seven or eight years and I think we have an opportunity to prevent this."

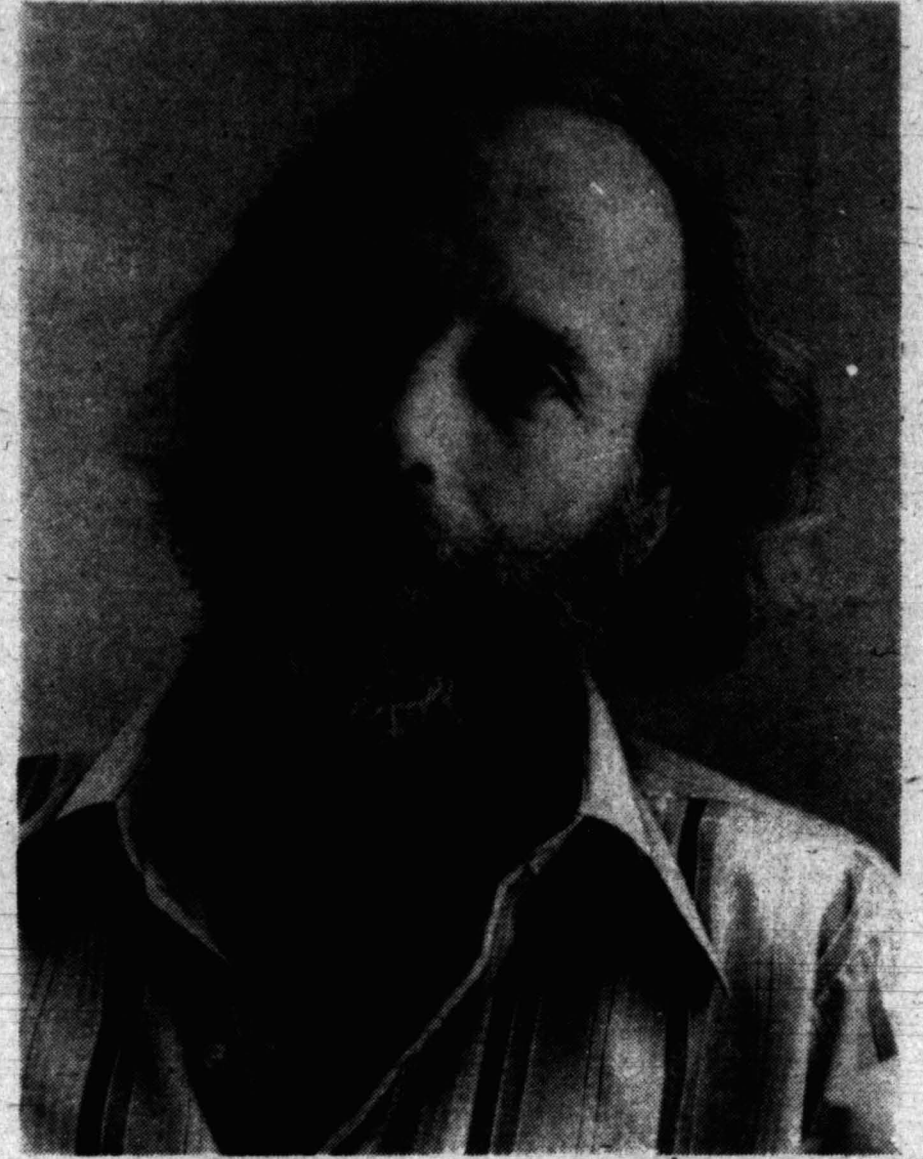

opinions, whether they come from business people or residents," says Davidson.

He would like to see some studies done on parking, tour buses and transportation systems. He says, "We need to move away from emotions and find out some hard data." He feels such studies would be the first step toward harmony between the residents and the business community.

When asked why many business men felt threatened by the Old Carmel Committee, Davidson said he feels that they would not feel threatened if they looked

In Davidson's opinion, the commercial interest controls a great deal of the business community, for they profit from the continual expansion. But he feels the merchant is caught in the middle between the residents and the commercial interests. Davidson thinks the merchant probably feels both the residents and the commercial interests take advantage of him. He explains, "The merchant has the tremendous overhead expense as well as the continuous competition that the constantly expanding business district gives him. I find it hard to believe that if the merchants could have their say, that what they would say is 'This building has got to stop. We have enough business sites. We have enough places of business and we've reached our capacity in terms of this area.'"

Although he will use this residential-town position as his guide, Davidson feels he will be a fair planning commissioner who judges each situation on its own merits. He says he wants to represent all the people of Carmel and he does not think of Carmel in factions of business people and residential people. He feels Carmel can not survive as it is if the community allows itself to be split along residential and business lines and as a planning commissioner, Davidson wants to work toward unifying the two groups.

"We need to move away from emotions and find out some hard data."

"As a planning commissioner, one of the objectives I would have is to try to understand the hard data available on any given topic so I can make realistic recommendations and decisions," notes Davidson. He laments the fact that there is very little hard data available on issues like tour buses and how much real business they bring, or what effect setting restrictions on truck delivery times would have for the business district.

"Right now all we have on the tour bus issue and many others is emotions and closely at the goals of Old Carmel.

Again, he repeated that Old Carmel, and other residents and the business people all want to keep Carmel attractive. "The reasons for keeping Carmel attractive might be different," he admits, "but the end goal is the same."

Davidson sees two different factions in the business community. These are: the commercial interest, the bankers, and builders, and the merchants, those with shops or restaurants.

Davidson points out again that Carmel has a "crying need" for hard data in regard to its business district and some of the problems the town is facing regarding tourists and what they mean to the Carmel economy.

As far as specific actions he plans to take as a planning commissioner, Davidson says he has none. "I don't think I can predict what I'm planning on doing, other than saying that I have a position and that position is going to influence what I do on the planning commission. And my position is that this is a residential town."

Planning Commission

Prescott appointed Friday

At last Friday night's meeting the Carmel City Council gave unanimous approval to Dr. Manfred Prescott's appointment to the Carmel Planning Commission.

Prescott, a retired surgeon and former chief civilian consultant for the United States Army, is well-known for the instrumental role he played in the annexation of the Walker tract. Prescott says he worked for annexation because he thought his home was in Carmel when he bought it in 1968.

"I was highly indignant that I could not vote in Carmel so I worked to change it," explains Prescott, who says he looked forward to living in Carmel for years. He visited Carmel frequently during the 40 years he made his home in San Francisco. In 1969 he and his wife made Carmel home and he traded his surgeon's gloves for gardening ones. "You should see my back yard. It's lovely," is his proud comment.

Prescott, who will begin his four-year term on the Planning Commission June 1st, says he is not going in to the job with any set philosophy. "I will learn the requirements and use my best judgement," he says, noting he has had "considerable command experience and is not in the habit of making decisions without having all the information.

Prescott replaces Commission Chairman Edward Neroda who has moved out of the city.

Supervisors reverse planning decision

Mission Ranch rezoning overturned

by IRENE GAASCH

Citizen action has paid off for a group of Carmel residents who organized to protest the rezoning of the Mission Ranch. Last Tuesday, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors voted unanimously to overturn the April 27th county planning commission decision to rezone the Mission Ranch property from nonconforming "R-1" to a "SC .45 OD" zoning.

"We're delighted with the decision. The Board of Supervisors took time to inform themselves of the facts," said Betty Bell after the Tuesday meeting. According to Bell, the Carmel residents personally visited each of the supervisors, following a meeting held at River School last Thursday.

In hopes of influencing the Board of Supervisors decision on the Mission Ranch, a group of citizens met with 5th District Supervisor Sam Farr at the School.

More than 100 concerned citizens came to let Farr know that they were unhappy with the Monterey County Planning Commission's unanimous vote to grant a change in zoning for the Mission Ranch at its April 27th meeting.

The commission voted to change the Mission Ranch property from non-

Mission Ranch property owners would need a use permit to do any remodeling. With the non-conforming R-1 zoning, no permit is needed unless structural changes are involved.

Contrary to the belief that the new zoning would open

The "SC HR" permit would allow the building of a landing strip, kennels, multiple dwellings, a resort hotel and mobile home camps, Bell told the audience. Bell said she asked county planner Bob Slimmons if the Mission Ranch could tear down its present structure and replace it with a resort motel with the "SC HR" zoning. "His answer was yes, all this would be permissible with this zoning; but he feels it's a fair assumption that the county would not give a use permit for such a development," she explains. "It's my feeling we counted on them not to change the R-1 zoning and they did."

Colonel Earl Powers, who circulated a petition in the Mission Ranch area, says of 150 people polled, only three were in favor of the zoning change. He notes that the pastor at the Mission refused to sign his petition but all three of the sisters signed it. Powers described the treatment he and other Carmel citizens received at the April 27th planning meeting as "rude and insulting."

"We were told the Mission Ranch had been there for 45 years and we had all survived. One man at the planning commission told me this whole thing was 'a thorn in our sides,'" said Powers with many audience members voicing similar sentiments.

Farr apologized for the alleged rude treatment. He mentioned his talks with Bob Slimmons, who said with the new zoning, any activity on the Mission Ranch property would require a use permit. Use permits require an environmental determination, meaning an Environmental Impact Report would be required, explained Farr. "I do feel in granting the reclassification, you'd have more control," Farr added.

Audience members for Farr's answer. "Either change supervisors or change governments," Farr had mentioned the possibility of annexing with Carmel and having government direction in zoning that would be closer to home and possibly more sympathetic.

Audience members booed and hissed, calling Farr's answer a poor one. One man angrily shouted, "The only real reason for a zoning change is to give the owner a better resale value. Why would she want to change the zoning if it will make it more difficult for her to make changes?" he asked.

Another man stood up and said, "we could go on like this all night." He asked Farr, what the citizens could do. "Since you said the supervisors don't always listen to what you have to

"I do feel in granting the reclassification, you'd have more control," County Supervisor Sam Farr told area residents last week. But the supervisors were unanimous this week in retaining the residential zoning of historic Mission Ranch.

conforming R-1 residential zoning to "SC .45 HR" zoning, allowing .45 units per acre on 9.1 acres of property.

The "HR" zoning is designed to preserve any existing buildings which are of historical interest. The remaining 11.8 acres goes to "OD," or open space zoning. With the new zoning, the the door for new development, the county planners feel it would give the residents more control. But Carmel citizens did not agree with this reasoning.

Betty Bell, whose home is within three blocks of the Mission Ranch, said "scrutiny of the use permit makes us (citizens) pale."

But citizens argued that the new zoning would allow anything from a landing strip to a mobile home camp. "Scrutiny of the use permit makes us pale," said area resident Betty Bell.

Carmel thieves steal anything

From gym bags to Buddahs

Carmel thieves came away with a surprisingly wide variety of goods last week, according to police.

The take included: a color TV, a wallet with no cash, a one and one half foot tall statue of Buddha, a Pennsylvania license plate, some prescription glasses, the rear wheel off a '69 Oldsmobile, a gym bag stuffed with dirty duds and a pair of boxing gloves, two suits (almost), a shoe box loaded with sterling silverware, and a fabric cover for a '77 Porsche—but not the Porsche. Last week local looters hauled in all the above goodies.

Mr. Erwin Torrell, owner of the Tally Ho Inn reported to police last Tuesday that someone robbed his Inn on Monte Verde and 6th Streets of a $400 color TV.

The following day burglars removed a cashless wallet and two speakers from the parked vehicle belonging to Claud Squire Hurst, San Antonio and San Lucia Streets.

A far-sighted crook under the guise of an optical store employee stole two pair of prescription glasses from Mrs. H.L. Farkas of Del Mesa, according to police records.

Also Wednesday, Manager Peter B. Magee of Gentlemen's Quarters, Carmel Plaza reported to police that an irate suspected shoplifter attempted to leave his store toting two suits with a combined value of almost $500.

A somewhat pious burglar removed a one and one half foot tall statue of Buddha from Charlotte Brown's residence at 6th and Guadalupe last Thursday, police say.

The records also show another thief whose yen for status proved only a facade last Saturday. The local owner of a 1977 Porsche, Gary Goldstein, told police that someone swiped the green fabric cover fitting from his Porsche, but left the car.

A Pennsylvania resident, Mr. J. Thomas Sobieski still can't figure out why someone removed the rear license plate from his car Saturday. Police files note his car was parked at the Hofsas House on San Carlos.

Miriam Bridwell of Carmel came back to her car parked on Mission Street Friday evening to find a bunch of rocks jacking up the rear of her car, in place of a Firestone Deluxe Champion tire.

Helen B. East, a Lincoln Street resident reported to police Friday someone removed a shoebox containing over $200 worth of sterling silver from her car when she moved here late last month.

A burglar who may have walked out of the film "Rocky" and into Carmel, punched his way into a vehicle parked near the Laurie Hastings residence on Mission Street. His snatch: a gym bag with a pair of boxing gloves.

Finally, over $200 worth of lobster tails were removed from the freezer at the Briar House on Mission and 7th Streets.

Owner John Muench told police that an employee discovered the freezer was pried open and a case of lobster tails pinched.

strongly disagreed as Farr's answer was met with loud outbursts. One man said, "The Mission Ranch has done what it wanted to do regardless of what was on the books."

"Under the new zoning, the owner, Margaret Dienelt, would have to show plans and have them approved," reminded Farr. "She never did before" was the bitter answer from one audience member. Farr explained that the owner did not have to have plans approved under her non-conforming status.

One woman stood up and asked why the Board of Supervisors and the Planning Commission could "act autonomously and tell us what we want. We go, we're unheard or ignored. They've done it before — on Scenic," she said in a voice tinged with anger.

The loud applause quieted say, even though you have agreed to tell them our wishes here tonight, what can we do?" he asked Farr. Farr suggested calling the other members of the board of supervisors. It was his feeling that the supervisors who would be most sympathetic would be Michael Moore and Dusan Petrovic.

Audience members agreed to make their wishes — to keep the zoning a non-conforming R-1 — known to the supervisors. They did just that — supervisor Petrovic drove over to inspect the property personally Tuesday morning, according to one citizen.

Tuesday afternoon, we called Attorney Robert D'Isidoro, who represented Mrs. Dienelt at the April 27th planning commission meeting for his comment on the supervisor's decision but were unable to reach him.

Postal seminar to give mail tips

The United States Postal Service wants to save you money.

What's more, they'll even show you how. The First Annual Postal Seminar Workshop will teach you how to save one cent, a nickel or even more, on every item you mail, according to Carmel Postmaster Frank Ledesma.

The June 9 seminar at the Holiday Inn in Monterey can help individuals save a little and businesses save a bunch.

The seminar will cover metered mail, bulk mail, special services and international mail. Experts from the San Jose customer service office will provide advice, and chair panel discussions.

Postmaster Ledesma says there are a host of ways for customers to save money.

Businesses mailing 500 pieces or more can save a penny postage per letter when the mail is presorted.

Presorting entails sorting mail according to zip code before mailing.

Ledesma says many banks, doctors and financial institutions — due to bulk mailings — can qualify for these postal discounts.

The postmaster pointed out other money-saving opportunities. International mail postage, for example, is often misunderstood.

Postage requirements on international mail is now 31 cents per half-ounce up to the first two ounces. Each additional half-ounce after that is only 26 cents. That's a five cents savings per half-ounce.

The postmaster further explained that special delivery letters are not quite so special as many of us suspect.

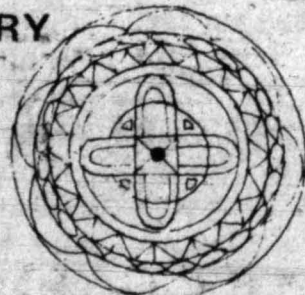

"It's not as if a special delivery letter gets its own plane," explains a bemused Ledesma.

A special delivery letter goes out with the rest of the mail. But the post office vows it will be out on the street within two hours of arrival at the receiving post office.

SERVING THE ENTIRE MONTEREY PENINSULA

On Mal Paso Drive in CARMEL RIVIERA

Looking in, you wouldn't know it's there. Looking out, you command a 180° vista of the sea: the coast's major shipping lane, the whales' promenade, the sport-fishermen's playground.

The house itself rests firmly on one acre, 350 feet above the sea and about a quarter-mile inland. Shaped like the wings of a 747, it points resolutely toward the southwest. The north wing, on your right as you come down the drive, is 53 feet long. It contains the 26 x 19 living room, paneled in bleached mahogany, crowned by a vaulted ceiling, united with the sea by 2 vast picture windows. A brick chimney breast rises to the ridge beam. And beyond is the north bedroom, a soft, insistent lavender with its own aluminum-cased windows and luxurious bath.

The east wing is 55 feet long. Its 2 bedrooms branch off a long cabinet-lined corridor. The master bedroom is at the wing-tip, creating the extraordinary conformation of 2 sleeping areas almost 100 feet apart. The inboard bedroom is now a formal dining room, but could as easily be a den, library, or . . . ah, bedroom.

At the center, where the wings join, is the Captain's Bridge, a fantastic kitchen facing the sea through an oblique corner window. Tiled counter tops with built-in sink, Corning range and other appliances line the seaward walls. And behind is a butler's pantry with wet bar, breakfast alcove and, through French doors, a warm, glassed-in deck.

Outbuildings include a fully equipped, climate-controlled greenhouse; a potting shed we mistook for a guest house; a large lath-house for orchids; fenced-in garden; and the world's largest Monterey pine.

Among things you take for granted: carpeting, drapes, 2-car garage, an extra room and bath on the lower level, shake roof, vertical redwood siding. But this you don't: all the water you want because you're part of the Carmel Riviera Mutual Water Co.

Built in 1958, this 19-year-old is old enough to have all the kinks out, young enough to be in full bloom. The price: $192,500.

Rustic Contemporary High on a Hillside

What is a rustic contemporary? It's a crisp, modern design executed in natural materials like the home, above, cleverly adapted to its sloping site on Lower Trail. The wood exterior and shake roof blend beautifully with surrounding pines and other natural growth.

Wood paneling and beamed wood ceilings distinguish the living room, richly carpeted like the rest of the 1,825 sq. ft. home. At left can be glimpsed the loft study, or den. Half a story higher are two bedrooms and two baths. Up a few steps from the dramatic entry are the dining room, kitchen, laundry and half bath.

The steps, above, are on the large, rear, two-level deck and lead to a hot tub. At right, on the lower level, is an outdoor entertainment center with tile counter, sink, electric outlets and carefully constructed Carmel stone barbecue fireplace. A second big deck is off the living room, and a third opens off the dining room. Drought resistant planting adds to the desirability of this exceptional property.
